

INTERVIEW WITH MACKLOWE PROPERTIES' HARRY MACKLOWE KILLIK & CO'S MARK NELSON
LANCÔME'S ELEANOR GILMORE BURBERRY APPOINTS DANIEL LEE AS CHIEF CREATIVE OFFICER LUXURYNSIGHT'S JONATHAN SIBONI AND JUHUA CUI WELLNESS WITH ACCOR'S EMLYN BROWN
BREMONT COLLABORATES WITH WHITE DESERT EWAN VENTERS UNVEILS THE AUDLEY IN LONDON
LUXURY YACHTS LAUNCHED BY FOUR SEASONS 50-YEAR-OLD RELEASE FROM THE GLENTURRET
Q&A FASHION AND INTERIORS DESIGNER PEARL LOWE

luxury briefing

ISSUE 234

New York is constantly rebuilding itself. I've made my career in real estate, with the cognizance of that, and I like people to join in the marketplace of creating buildings and opportunities.

added a tremendous amount of dignity to the building, which is positioned next to Central Park. It's a very popular building because of the Apple Cube, the views into Central Park – and its profile on the skyline is very distinguished. When you are in 432 Park Avenue, you can look down and see the General Motors Building and it thrills me that I was involved in these structures.

I also enjoyed designing and building 610 Broadway, an office building I built on the side of a car wash in what was known as the Cast Iron District on a major thoroughfare where NYU ends on Houston Street, and Soho begins. That is a graceful building – it's only six storeys but has so many interesting and subtle hidden elements to it: glass elevators, atriums, beautiful, graceful floors, and high ceilings.

Every one of the buildings that I've done over the past 50 years has always been very special to me. I'm striving to get to a design and architectural harmony that pleases me and I know will be pleasing for our tenants and for the real estate industry. So I feel good about all the buildings that I have built, starting from the first one right up to the present one. I've been around for a while in the business. So there's an awful lot that I've seen that's come and gone and recreated. I think I have an affinity to virtually every part of the city, and I admire the new construction that my colleagues are performing, I admire the expansion of midtown, I admire the expansion to the west side in both Chelsea, which is a newly created area, in the Hudson Yards, which is newly created and the whole development of the west side from 72nd street down to Bowling Green.

Opening spread:
Harry Macklowe,
CEO of Macklowe Properties

This spread, from left: The Red Room on the ground floor
of One Wall Street,
the exterior of One Wall Street

Final spread from left: The Apple Store
on Fifth Avenue;
One of One Wall
Street's luxury
condos; 432 Park Avenue

One Wall Street had a big impact on the area when it was originally built in 1929. How does Macklowe Properties seek to impact the area with its redevelopment – are there any parallels?

Now that the building is finished and you can walk through the lobbies, the apartments, the corridors, and you can see the spaces that we've created, you recognise the vibrancy of the building. We've been able to accept the challenge of planning and executing a conversion from office to residential without any compromises. The One Wall Street building is large, and the apartments have high ceilings, and generally have a great volume to them. I feel that we've created apartments that have a tranquillity to them, that when you walk in and close the door, everything feels good about the environment.

The Red Room, on the ground level of the building, is something that we have restored and cherish. During the 1920s, when buildings were built and planned, certain architects and developers planned public spaces with significant artists, decorators or designers. In this case, The Irving Trust and Ralph Walker commissioned the muralist Hildreth Meière and gave her a very free hand in designing what was going to be the reception room of the banking office. And when you walked in, this is what you saw: a floor-to-ceiling mosaic.

One Wall Street is also part of the excitement of the new financial district, the new Downtown. Midtown is very quiet, but Downtown, our district below Canal Street, is very exciting. There are hundreds of public places: parks, museums, food courts, as well as the South Street Seaport Museum, Casa Cipriani, the Governors Island Ferry, and Staten Island Ferry.

Before I bought the building, I walked the neighbourhood on several weekends and was pleasantly surprised to see mothers and fathers with strollers and baby carriages throughout the financial district. I felt that this alternate space was going to continue to flourish for young families, and it has. It's become more and more popular. So I think the district below Canal Street will be exciting and innovative for many years to come. There is so much to see Downtown that it makes uptown look less interesting.

Before 9/11, Downtown was viewed as mostly financial and insurance districts. Those industries have since dispersed and migrated uptown, and there has been a significant conversion of the tertiary office buildings to residential ones. We at One Wall Street are the prominent leader of that conversion, worthy of being the 432 Park Avenue of Downtown. There are three great buildings in Downtown: the Four Seasons Hotel, which was built by one of my colleagues; 80 Spruce Street, a rental project designed by Frank Gehry, then there's our One Wall Street building. We think we're the leader and prestige building Downtown, and we're striving for that continuing image.

Macklowe Properties has been behind some truly groundbreaking retail spaces in the city, perhaps the most iconic being the Apple Store on Fifth Avenue. Can you tell us a bit about the reception and legacy of this building?

I'm very flattered that the Apple Cube became the landmark, or the logo, of the Apple company because the glass box is now in Shanghai, Beijing, France, and throughout the world. This was the architectural motif refined and created by Steve Jobs and the Apple design team when they moved to the General Motors building. For me, it's wonderful because it has become a tourist attraction.

Every one of the buildings that I've done over the past 50 years to me has always been very special. I'm striving to get to a design and an architectural harmony that pleases me and I know will be pleasing for tenants and the real estate industry.

The Apple store is open 24 hours a day, and the amount of business that they do from ten o'clock in the evening until eight o'clock in the morning is most enviable. It's almost $100 million a year of business, in what would have been dark closing hours. Apple and I discussed the 24-hour-store and they projected $60 million of sales in those twilight hours. As it turned out, it's been even greater than that, which is terrific. Building something that the public uses and the public likes is very gratifying. I can't take credit for the business they're doing as it's their product, but I can take credit for part of the design – not all of it!

With shoppers returning to physical stores, how important is it for retailers to have a presence in New York – and what do you think are the best locations for luxury retail in particular?

It had been Madison Avenue. Now a secondary prestige location is Soho, south of Houston Street. The excitement of Madison Avenue and Fifth Avenue has been somewhat dimmed by the Internet, but that doesn't stop the significant retailers, especially luxury brands, from making statements. Now that the rents have come down considerably, it's even more attractive and it will probably take another year or so to retenant the Madison Avenue stores.

But that will happen and the retail business will continue to get better and better over the next projected five years. So I think that rents are very favourable now. If I were in the retail business now,

I wouldn't be looking to make purchases or make leases for space for the next 10 or 15 years. It's a very good time for tenants in this market.

Can you explain how you have created a city within a city with One Wall Street?

The brief that I wrote in 2014 when I bought the building, was to create a city within a city. It was to create a cobbler, a hairdresser and conveniences within this building, like a mini Rockefeller Center. The concourse underneath Fifth Avenue, where all the Rockefeller Center buildings are connected, is filled with vibrant retail stores that serve the needs of the residents. I felt that's what I could create in One Wall Street.

When I started examining the tenant market and looking for commercial tenants, I successfully found Whole Foods, who are business friends of mine – I've done deals with them and dealt directly with the President and the founder in the past. I knew from looking at their magnificent store in Columbus Circle that they are a wonderful purveyor of foods, fruits and vegetables. They set the stores up in a very dramatic, architecturally splendid way and everything looks so exciting and enticing. Within Whole Foods, there is a restaurant, coffee shop, very interesting and exotic foods, seasonings, vegetables, fruits, fish, meats, and it's beautifully presented. I thought that it was very fulfilling, and wouldn't that be nice for a tenant at 10 p.m. wanting to get a banana and being able to go downstairs to do that.

With the Lifetime Fitness gym, we have 75,000 square feet – among the largest health

I've been around for a while in the business, so there's an awful lot that I have seen come and go and be recreated. I think I have an affinity to virtually every part of the city, and I admire the new construction that my colleagues are performing.

clubs in the city – and I think it's sensational. They're wonderful operators, and we have given all the residents in the building memberships, so that the Lifetime Fitness is the building's gym, and the facilities are extraordinary. In addition, we have our swimming pool on the 38th floor and our restaurant which we call the One Club, a beautiful social space which is very nice for dinners, breakfasts, lunches, cocktails, and an important amenity to be used in the building. We have 550 families living in the building, so that should be more than enough to support the restaurant and allow us to present good food, with good chefs and a very attractive place to go or have room service food to be delivered to you. That I think will be very successful, and a wonderful amenity that people will find very desirable. ●

onewallstreet.com